

Sublime times in Shanghai.

A recap of the BIR Young Traders Group Shanghai dinner party at the MINT Club at our last convention.

Bingo anyone? Social networking games have played a big role in the BIR Young Traders events in recent times. The games have been designed to encourage participants at the young traders dinner to mingle with people that may not trade the same commodity as they do, or may not operate in the same markets, but who are all involved in the recycling industry. Really, this is the whole idea behind the Young Traders Dinner; to bring likeminded future (and current) stars of the industry from across the globe together in one room for one evening; the games just help speed up the networking process along a little bit.

Shanghai saw the introduction of a new social networking game called BINGO! The rules are loosely based around those of what most would know as Bingo, however in order to play this game we all needed to collect business cards from at least nine people in the room. We found the game a great success and saw many people speaking to people that they may not normally mingle with.

Once again we shared a delicious meal in one of Shanghai's iconic night spots, MINT. Before we knew it, dinner was over and the more adventurous young traders carried on partying away at another nearby Shanghai hot spot.

We're looking forward to seeing what Warsaw will bring us!
